DEAR FRIENDS,

Few people have the opportunity to walk through the doors at African Services Committee in Harlem one week and through the gates of their Shola testing center in Addis Ababa the next. Fewer still have witnessed the impact of the AIDS epidemic on these two continents and confronted the unmet needs of people living with HIV around the world. As a board member of African Services, I am one of these fortunate few and have been humbled by the perspective this experience has given me.

It is easy to be overwhelmed by the many challenges this epidemic presents, especially in Africa, which is home to only 10 percent of the world’s population and yet struggles with 64 percent of all HIV infections. This threat—along with the myriad others inflicted by war, poverty and political oppression—set people in motion toward opportunities for change that will enable them to build healthy, stable and productive lives.

Some seek this change in New York City as millions of other immigrants have before them. For African newcomers, it is an enormous comfort to discover African Services Committee, a welcoming place that understands what they need to succeed and offers the resources to help them do so. The current political climate, however, has made African Services’ mission—to support and empower this African community—more challenging, as legal protections for marginalized immigrants have eroded. It has also intensified the day-to-day struggle of African immigrants in New York City, especially those who are living with HIV/AIDS.

Through my work in international public health, I understand the challenges of an effective AIDS response in the U.S. and around the world. To this end, African Services Committee’s dedicated work is an inspiration and their positive impact gives real hope that we will see the end of the AIDS epidemic in our time. In working with colleagues, it has been deeply gratifying to learn the extent of recognition and respect that African Services has earned. It is through the ambitious leadership of co-Executive Directors Kim and Asfaha, and the tireless efforts of staff, that African Services has built such a reputation for dedication and innovation.

It is only through our consistent support that African Services is able to continue this important work and expand their impact. I ask everyone who reads this—friends, funders, individual donors, even perfect strangers—to lend your support and start with a contribution to African Services’ capital campaign today. With a strong foundation for African Services, we can preserve a safety net for African newcomers in New York City and continue the fight against HIV in vulnerable communities around the world.

Sincerely,

Awash Teklehaimanot, Ph.D., MPH
Co-Chair, Board of Directors
Tuberculosis and HIV are a double health threat and a double stigma that often leave people homeless when they need help most.

At the helm of African Services’ innovative HIV/TB program are Evariste Akpele and Aida Diallo-Diagne. Last year, they helped more than 60 people coping with co-infection to begin tuberculosis and ARV treatment and find stable housing to ensure their health.

Together, Aida and Evariste provide intensive, multilingual support to clients, their partners and families. Working hand-in-hand with Harlem Hospital, they facilitate directly-observed therapy to ensure patients receive the daily TB treatment necessary for a full recovery. For patients who have no support after hospitalization, they find creative housing solutions, often pairing up clients as roommates to serve as a surrogate family.

On the impact of the HIV/TB program, Aida says, “A client recently told me, ‘African Services is like a nest to a bird. It is a place that keeps me warm, feeds me and then let’s me fly away when I’m ready.’ —That makes my day.”

Joint programs such as this, in poor communities with limited access to healthcare, are considered one of the most cost-effective ways of controlling TB and improving the health of people living with HIV.

“African Services is like a nest to a bird. It is a place that keeps me warm, feeds me and then let’s me fly away when I’m ready.”

AFRICAN SERVICES IN ETHIOPIA

Building on the strength of our HIV testing program in Addis Ababa, African Services expanded its operations, its partnerships and its vision in Ethiopia in 2005.

...the betterment of immigrants is to the benefit of all people...
— Kadiatou Diallo

Broadening AIDS care and support services at the community level in Ethiopia is vital. With the support of Becton Dickinson, we have integrated CD4 testing at our Shola center and are providing referrals to care through a growing network of adult and pediatric AIDS treatment sites.

Our advocacy work is supported by a network of allies and supporters, including Kadiatou Diallo, who became a dedicated, visible and outspoken advocate on behalf of African immigrants after the death of her son, Amadou Diallo. It was a pleasure to welcome her to African Services in December to learn more about our work building bridges between African immigrants and their communities.

At rallies in Washington, legislative visits in Albany, and demonstrations in New York City, African Services staff and clients remain a strong voice for humane immigration policy and universal health rights.

WOMEN’S ADVOCACY AND IMMIGRANT ACTIVISM

African Services continues to blaze new trails through passionate and informed advocacy, speaking out on issues that affect African communities around the world.

In 2005, peer counselor Sombo Mweemba and community advocate Amanda Lugg expanded African Services’ newest initiative mobilizing African immigrant women and linking them with other grassroots women’s groups working on HIV. They focus on developing leadership skills and creating opportunities for African immigrant women to share their perspectives and promote a broader understanding of AIDS and its impact in their community.

“I made my way through Shola Market and saw a large gate with African Services’ familiar red, yellow and green sign...It is an exciting example of a wealth of knowledge and experience applied judiciously in a resource-poor setting.”
— Pamela Brown-Peterside, Board Member

To further meet the public demand for free and confidential HIV testing, African Services opened a second testing center in Merkato, the largest market in Addis. To bring testing beyond the capital, African Services partnered with BGI, a French bottling company, to open a third testing center in the provincial town of Kombolcha, serving employees of the company’s plant as well as local residents.

Having provided HIV testing to more than 25,000 people since July 2003, African Services is now working to implement ARV therapy at the community level in Ethiopia.
GIVING VOICE TO EXPERIENCE: HIV STIGMA

Last year, a dozen African immigrants from all walks of life stepped into a recording studio to share stories from their lives with StoryCorps, an oral history project documenting life in the U.S. today.

In interviews facilitated by African Services’ staff, clients spoke about their lives in Africa, the search for opportunity and the experience of building a new life in New York City. For many, it was also a unique opportunity to talk candidly about the impact of the AIDS epidemic on their lives.

“A promise is an assurance of help when it is needed. I’ve made a promise to my children—that I will live long with the HIV virus—but have the world’s leaders kept their promises?” — Anita Battacharjee

African Services’ clients gave voice to African immigrants today and despite the diverse perspectives, the recordings share an unyielding sense of optimism and possibility in American life. Their interviews join thousands of others archived in the Library of Congress by StoryCorps.

To honor the efforts and achievements of African Services, Mrs. Kofi Annan spent World AIDS Day with staff and clients at our offices in Harlem. She expressed her support for communities around the world most impacted by the epidemic and her commitment to providing leadership in the fight against AIDS.

“Keep the Promise: World AIDS Day 2005

On December 1st, African Services and UNAIDS brought thousands of people together at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine for New York City’s largest World AIDS Day commemoration. Musicians, artists and activists from around the world took the stage, calling on leaders to “Keep the Promise” and honor their commitments to reverse the global AIDS epidemic.

Anita Battacharjee, a client of African Services, was among the evening’s speakers and spoke about her experiences as a mother in Africa, immigrating to New York City, learning that she is HIV-positive, and becoming an AIDS activist.

“I am most proud of my brother. By working and sending money to Zimbabwe, I helped him complete medical school. Now he sees hundreds of patients a day.” — Sabina M.

DEEPENING OUR ROOTS: A CAPITAL CAMPAIGN FOR AFRICAN SERVICES

Through the generous support of our many friends and allies in 2005, African Services reached the half-way mark in its $535,000 capital campaign. Deepening Our Roots is an ambitious fundraising initiative launched in 2003 to complete the process of establishing a strong foundation for African Services in Harlem through a long-term lease and expansion of our office space at 429 West 127th Street.

The plan includes a drop-in community center, ESL classroom, additional counseling and office space, and an elevator to make African Services accessible for all our clients. We are particularly grateful to Henry van Ameringen for believing in our vision and investing in the dynamic community that has taken shape at African Services.
